All sides agree that while programs to reduce production can help a little, the only long-term solution to the surplus problem is to export more, which they also agree will not be casy.

American farmers have been producing larger and larger grain crops and more and more milk while domestic consumption has lagged far behind. Today, if grain farmers cannot export nearly twothirds of their wheat and at least 40 percent of their corn, these commodities pile up in the storage elevators and their prices stay at levels that yield meager profits at best. These woes are now compounded by rapidly accelerating competi-tion from such other farm commodity exporting countries as Brazil. He may not have gotten around to these items yet, but the agriculture secretary has not been idle. He bucked State Department resistance to provide cheap surplus wheat to American millers, who converted it to flour and sold one million tons to Egypt at below-market prices. Most of Egypt's flour has come from France, which has the highest farm subsidies in the Common Market.

Earlier Mr. Block arranged for the sale of wheat to Morocco, another longtime French customer. This he subsidized with what he calls "blended credit." The Agriculture Department guaranteed 80 percent of a private loan for the wheat purchase and gave the Moroccans direct credit for the remaining 20 percent.

Last week he announced a new subsidized credit export package for Iraq, with which that country will buy $230 million worth of American grains, eggs and oilseed products. Then he disclosed a similar subsidized package for Portugal, providing hiended credit for the purchase of $225 million worth of wheat, feedgrains and oilseeds. On the home from the payment-

In the meantime, be says he intends to use blended credit and any other available subsidies until the Common Market and the other countries agree to stop subsidizing their exports.

As for the 150,000 pounds of dairy surplus the Senate wants sold, Mr. Block already has the necessary authority and would be happy to get rid of it. But large sales to any dairy importing coun-try except the Soviet Union would violate a pledge not to invade New Zealand's traditional markets.

countries on his Central American and Caribbean itinerary. Pope John Paul II focused the common attention on the issue of decency in public life. That was not all he did: He also raised issues of parochial concern, some of them - the role of priests, the attitude toward evangelicals — with plain political implications. But the emphasis on decency dominated the pope's Latin progress.

Except perhaps in democratic Costa Rica and Belize. that emphasis put him in collision with the reigning political authorities, all of whom run more or less unjust and indecent orders. The particulars of the collision constituted the "news" at each stop along the way.

In Sandinist-ruled Nicaragua, the only place where the authorities chose to confront him rather than try to co-opt him or snuggle in under his wing, John Paul stood firm and, by his hosts choice, ended up sharpening the conflict between church and state and among the divided local Catholics. Salvadoran Dialogue?

"stretchers," best describes the Reagan administration's tales about the imminent collapse of "our" side in El Salvador's civil war, There was the one about the possibility that the Salvadoran Army would run out of bullets in 30 days. Or the State Department's forecast that Nicaragua's 40,000-strong army might invade El Salvador, presumably without being nouced as it crossed Honduras.

The official analysis goes on in that apocalypuc, simplistic way. Why are the guerrillas doing better? Because they get Soviet arms. What factors can turn the ude of battle? More American aid and advisers (or "trainers," according to the revised standard version).

Congress, distracted and uncertain of the truth even if it disbelieves these tales, may again give President Reagan what be wants and now be is asking $110 million for military assistance. No one wants to be blamed for losing" El Salvador, and when a case is ioined in such black-and-red terms, waverers till to the president. But let the Reagan administration beware: All its claims will be hostage to the real world of El Salvador.

The claim of an ammunition shortage has already been detonated. Whatever else the Salvadoran Army may lack, it's not bullets. Nor do its officers confirm any seismic shift in the military balance. Although the insurgents took a provincial town for three days, this war is of course, mean anything. What it should still a stalemate. If the guerrillas bave seized the initiative, a very different explanation for their success is offered from the scene. The Times's Drew Middleton reports that Soviet

Not lies but Huckleberry Finn's word, and Cuban military aid is not a key factor in the insurgent campaign. He finds no such easy parallel with Vietnam. What raises Vietnam memories is the inadequate motivation and leadership of "our" troops. While the guerrillas fight around the clock, it's a 9-to-5 war for Salvadoran officers. And most of the casualties bave been civilians. Americans have been on this slope before and know too well what lies at the bottom: desperate appeals for greater United States involvement. For that there is no significant support in Congress or among the American people, much as all wish to keep El Salvador from yet a new kind of tyranny.

Wise policy would fit available resources to an attainable goal. Whatever weapons may be needed, they cannot replace motivation and a plausible political strategy. For that the Reagan administration now suggests another election, in December, But who will run it, and who will assure the safety of an opposition whose leaders have been slaughtered? That cannot simply be left to the government of the day, without justifying another leftist boycott and strengthening the extreme right.

There is a better way, urged again by Pope John Paul II. He calls for a "dialogue" between government and opposition - a word that is acceptable to insurgents, and apparentmean is serious talks, then an internationally monitored campaign. Power sharing of some kind could yet resolve what violence cannot.

About East-West Relations

The victory of the Christian Democrats in the West German elections and the poor showing of the left in local elections in France indicate a trend toward the right in Europe, a trend that will be welcomed in Washington. President Reagan had already begun to relapse into a harsber language — "this evil empire" — in speaking of the Soviet Union.

But it would be a serious mistake for President Reagan to believe that Chancellor Kohl can afford to be much less pressing than Herr Schmidt about arms control talks with the Russians. Nor should he think that Europe's more conservative mood means that the trans-Atlantic gap will close without greater effort on both sides to barmonize their economic and security policies.

It is salutary to be reminded that the voice of Reaganism is not the only American voice on world affairs, especially in dealing with the Soviet Union, Another American voice was heard last week in a sober and realistic speech in London by the former U.S. secretary of state. Cyrus Vance. Mr. Vance suggested seven principles for conducting East-West relations. Of these, the most important was a reminder that in the nuclear age neither of the superpowers can ensure its security at the expense of the other. Their survival depends on achieving a common security. This common interest, indeed necessity, transcends their ideological differences. Yet the implications of this interdependence are recognized only intermittently by U.S. and Soviet statesmen. They have continued to believe that there is still room for serious risk-taking in the pursuit of their supposed national interests, when in fact the margin of safety is constantly shrinking.

Detailed nuclear arms negotiations need to be paralleled by broader talks on how to manage the political implications of the nuclear relationship. This should be the subject of a summit with the new Soviet leadership.

Pollution Is the Problem

Anne McGill Burford has resigned under fire as the nominal head of America's effort to clean up its air, its water and its thousands of man-made swamps filled with chemical poisons. Unless the White House changes the act that it expects Mrs. Burford's successor to perform, any new chief of the Environmen-Protection Agency will eventually join ber in whatever political dumping ground the White House finds for her.

Although the president is seldom explicit about it, when he says that he wants government off the country's back he is talking in large part about what he sees as a burden that pollution controls impose on selected indusiries - including those that filled hundreds of dump sites in the country with toxic chemicals without thinking much about the consequences for the future. As long as the White House views the chaos in the Environmental Protection Agency as a temporary political embar-rassment — while the rest of the country sees it as a permanent health hazard - nothing will change except the director's name.

Fine Friends in a Friendly Hemisphere

WASHINGTON — In these days of debate on El Salvador, highlighted by President Ronald Reagan's call for more U.S. involvement, I have been reading the wrong book. It is a newly published book about Canadian-U.S. relations by Lawrence Martin, a reporter for the Toronto Globe and Mail, entitled "The Presidents and the Prime Ministers."

It is the wrong book because it is a vivid reminder of bow stunningly blind the United States can be to the effects of its actions on those countries that fate put alongside it. It has a hard time seeing itself as its neighbors to the north or south see it.

Puncturing what be calls in his subtitle "the myth of bilateral bliss," Mr. Martin tells some hair-raising tales of what U.S. presidents have done to Canadian prime ministers in the past century -all in their best interests, of course.

Here was Lyndon Johnson having a diplomat-

c discussion with Lester Pearson up at Camp David, the day after Mr. Pearson made a speech criticizing the U.S. bombing of North Vietnam. "Striding the porch, his arms sawing the air, his sulfurous vocabulary contaminating it, Johnson ripped into Pearson full-voltage ... Having pinned the much smaller Pearson against the railing, the president of the United States grabbed him by the shirt collar, twisted it and lifted the shaken prime minister by the neck. The verbal abuse continued in a venomous torrent. You

p—d on my rug, he thundered."

Afterward, when the two leaders met the press, they both described the session as "friend-ly." A decade elapsed before anything like a full picture of the episode emerged. But Mr. Martin writes that such camouflage is customary.

By David S. Broder

"The U.S. presidents and the Canadian prime ministers would meet more than 80 times ... Virtually all of the meetings, according to the public pronouncements, would be splendid successes ... Sometimes a 'new era of consultation' would be born, and it would be followed by another 'new era of consultation.' During each era the Canada-U.S. discussions would always be 'open and frank,' and if they had that open and frank quality there would be an excellent chance that a 'great rapport' would be established. The great rapport in turn would often lead to another 'historic agreement' serving to keep the 'un-defended border' undefended."

And all the while presidents were delivering the most unbelievable insults to prime ministers, sometimes intentionally, sometimes not.

The polished John Kennedy issued a press release contradicting Prime Minister John Diefenbaker on joint defense issues, provoking a crisis that got Mr. Diefenbaker tossed out of office.

Harry Truman told reporters that the Canadian prime minister was coming to see him, but avoided saying his name (Louis St. Laurent)
"because I don't know how to say it."

Mr. Kennedy got off to a bad start with Mr.

Diefenbaker by calling him "Diefenbawker." Dwight Eisenhower, in a toast to the luckless Mr. Diefenbaker, welcomed the "prime minister of the great Republic of Canada" — and then be repeated those words, just to make clear that he thought Canada really was a republic. When Richard Nixon visited Ottawa in 1972, his advance men were rebuffed in an effort to remove Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau's tan furniture from his office and bring in blue chairs, judged more telegenic.

On the eve of his first visit to Ottawa in 1981, Ronald Reagan withdrew from the Senate a fisheries treaty of vital importance to Canada.

On and on the recital goes. Mr. Martin concedes that there was genuine friendship and cooperation between Franklin D. Roosevelt and Mackenzic King. He recounts a delightful meeting between Mr. Kennedy and Mr. Pearson at Hyannisport, which I was lucky enough to cov-But those were the exceptions.

His wild stories convey a serious point. The United States, through its presidents, has more often than not betrayed the most callous ignorance of the feelings, views, interests and sensi-bilities of the leaders of Canada.

It has been so unheeding that Sondra Gotlieb, wife of the current Canadian ambassador in Washington, once remarked to The New York Times, "For some reason, a glaze passes over people's faces when you say Canada. Maybe we should invade South Dakota or something."

The United States is the 800-pound gorilla in the Western Hemisphere, and more often than not it has acted it. We ought to bear that in mind when we decide that we have the wisdom to decide the future of some smaller country to which the Lord has shown special favor by allowing it to live in the shadow of the United States.

Some Guatemalan Children Don't Rate Bullets

BOSTON — What follows is for readers with strong stomachs: "We were told again and again of government soldiers, in uniform, arnving at a village, rounding up men being done now by the government of Guatemala — a government that has the support of the president of the United States. The account comes from a New York lawyer, Stephen L. Kass, who has just been interviewing refugees

Some Nicaraguan Children Survive

EL CASTILLO, Nicaragua — The Río San Juan is a forsaken waterway. The jungle crowds in, repeating itself mile upon mile. Only the river, broad, brown, slowly shifting toward the Atlantic, breaks the monotony. Two centuries ago Lord Nelson lost an eye here fighting the Spanisb. In 1849 Vanderbilt used the niver to transport California goldhunters across the continent. Now the romance has gone.

The sense and possibilities of adventure have departed and the river is almost abandoned, silted up, the victim of neglect and poor farming methods that have stripped the hillsides and allowed the topsoil to be washed down into the river. Truly this is a backwater.

Of every 1,000 children born in this part of Nicaragua, 200 die before they reach the age of five. The number-one killer is diarrhea. There is a lack of potable water, and excreta disposal is haphazard.

A) El Castillo the bouses are built on stilts that straggle alongside the river. Dominated by the fort that the Soanish built to hold the British at bay, it looks charming. In fact it's a death trap. Filth from houses upriver is carried downstream for other children to bathe and wash in it. When the dictator Anastasio Somoza Debayle ruled he left well enough alone. He was no great student of infant mortality statistics. This changed with the revolution three years ago, when Somoza was toppled and the Sandinists took over. Anthony Kennedy, the UNICEF representative, recalls that airlines weren't functioning, so be borrowed a plane from the president of Costa Rica. The revolution ended on July 19 and by the 24th he was in Managua talking to the new minister of health. Cesar Amador Kuhl,

It ouickly became apparent that diarrhea had been exacerbated by the upheavals of war. Mr. Kennedy. whose previous assignment was in Pakistan, had pioneered there -along with a UNICEF doctor, Lou Shapiro - the use of a mixture of salts and glucose in a critical ratio of 8-to-1 to counter the dehydration that kills diarrhea-affected infants. By the time of the Nicaraguan revolution UNICEF bad refined the medication down to a 10-cent packet that had only to be mixed with a liter ol water. Within two days a child would increase its capacity to absorb fluid by a factor of 24.

Before this oral rehydration therapy was discovered, the only way to save a baby was to feed it intravenously in a hospital. But in most

With extensive use of volunteers, nearly 300 oral rehydration centers have been opened. UNICEF says the packet is becoming as accepted as aspirin. Mothers are so relaxed about its use that when a baby gets sick they just send an older child along to "collect the salts." This year the Nithe country's children.

Of course, the health officials are also finding that the salts are not a Most of the stricken countries have cure. Unless the roots of the problem bad sanitation and contaminated water - are dealt with diarrhea infection quickly returns. One area that they have not penetrated is the Rio San Juan jungle. This suggests that, like Somoza, the Sandinists may be prone to putting out of mind what is out of sight. Sull, Nicaragua has shown what can be done and is far ahead of the other Latin American countries in the use of what the Lancet, the prestigious British medical journal, has called "potentially the greatest medical advance of the century." You don't have to change the economy from capitalist to socialist to bring profound change to the mass of poor people at the level where it real-counts. The Sandinists would do well to encourage the capitalist economy they have inherited to create wealth and jobs - and then use the revenues for simple but important things like oral rehydration.

The writer has been visiting Nicaragua with financial support from UNI-CEF. He contributed this comment to the International Herald Tribune in the last two months. "We believe there is a continuing pattern of almost indiscriminate viocontinues; several thousand have lence directed at Indian peasant communities," Mr. Kass said. "Any village regarded by the local army commander as not firmly supportive of government efforts to destroy subversion is regarded as subversive itself -and, as such, a free-fire zone. "It is a level of butchery that seems unimaginable but is true.

When survivors from these villages try to live in the hills, the army destroys their crops. We heard that repeatedly, again from many differ-ent people. Helicopters are used to patrol the tillable areas and fire on people who try to grow things.

In our conversations with even the poorest Indians, they knew the United States supplied the helicopters and supported this government. Gen. Efrain Rios Montt installed himself as president of Guatemala in a coup last March. When President a coup last march, when President Ronald Reagan toured Latin Ameri-ca last year he met Gen. Rios Monit and rejected criticism of Guatemala's buman rights record. "Frankly," Mr. Reagan said, "I'm inclined to believe they've been gelting a bum rap." The administration then announced that Guatemala would be allowed to buy spare parts for belicopters and aircraft, after years of embargo. forces do in Guatemala - or of the El Salvador Army's continuing butchery of civilians — contrasts with the noble images Mr. Reagan evoked in asking Congress to send more military aid to El Salvador.

The goal in Central America, Mr. Reagan said, is "to replace poverty with development and dictatorship with democracy." He said that the United States insists on a "legitimate road to power," not rule "without the consent of the people."

If the Reagan administration were candid with the American people about its policy in Central America, it would say something like this: The governments we support in Guatemala and El Salvador do not live up to our most modest idea of decency. They murder their own citizens large numbers, and the few rich brutalh oppress the many poor. Moreover, they pay little attention to our views. Guatemala won't even let the International Red Cross look at its prisoners, and El Salvador has not convicted one official for the thousands of murders. But they are our allies against communism. They serve our strategic imerest, and that is why we must support them.

The administration will not say that - because the people of the United States would not stand for it. We are not that kind of people. We do not want such horrors condoned in our name. Not even to put down communism — if the policy would, which it will not.

mere 34 seats, down from their pres-ous 53. According to Mr. Strass, whose attacks on Mr. Genscher and the Free Democrats during the care paign were unbridled, the dog we ging FDP tail is no longer emiled to the four ministries it had while in coalition with the Social Democration der Helmut Schmidt, and in Mr.

Kohl's first cabinet.
Without the FDP as partner, Mr. Kohl, being six votes short of an absolute majority, would have to forms minority government in which Mr. Strauss and his conservative Bavarian faction would play a leading mk. That prospect is as distasteful to Mr. Kohl as it is to the Free Domocrats. whose return to the Bundestag is the in large measure to an energetic "Stop Strauss" campaign and a ingredient of the coalition.

Yet having pledged themselves to Mr. Kohl after abandoning Mr. Schmidt, the Free Democrats have no place else to go. Neither, for that matter, does Mr. Strauss.

Personal ambitions will be as much at stake as fundamental policy differences in this showdown in the coalition talks this week.

There are other signs of trouble. Christian and Free Democrats are taking seemingly intransigent pos-tions on whether to refund a tax sucharge being levied on high incomes this year. The Free Democrats campaigned on a pledge to refund the surcharge, which was enacted last December as a mandatory "loan" to the Treasury. The Christian Denocrats - whose left and Catholic-labor wing was the principal beneficiary of the elections — are against re-payment. They argue that the reve-nue is needed to reduce the lederal debt and deficits, and that their promise of a "social market oconomy" entails sharing burdens and belt-tightening among rich and poor.

Within the Christian Democrate bloc the "social" and "market" wings may be on a collision course as the party gropes for solutions for a detenorating economy and mounting inemployment and deficits. So the Kohl-Genscher coalition is already troubled by precisely the is-sues that broke up the left-liberal Schmidt-Genscher coalition last fall. International Herald Tribune.

From Mohammad Abu Tarbush in Paris

TUDGMENTS about the "Moslem world" can be as fatuous as judgments about the "Christian world." which takes in both Sweden and Paraguay. Moslems now number about a billion, dispersed around the globe.

They live in very different societies. A Moslem might have Aryan, Asian or African features. He might live in the wilderness of the Sahara or in cosmopolitan Beirut. Moslems include the stylishly dressed woman coming out of a cinema in Cairo, a beret-wearing farmer tending his vineyard in the south of France. a wanderer strolling through the souks of Fez in his loose diellahive.

The complexity of the subject might explain the failure of the West to comprehend the Islamic world. But it often seems that this failure, particularly when it concerns the Arab region, is based on prejudice. Since the days of the Crusaders there has been a tendency in the West to view the Moslem Arab world with a caricaturizing mix of hostility and romanticism. Still, it can come as a surprise to see a serious journalist misunderstand his subject. Such was the case in an article in this newspaper (Dec. 22) by David Lamb under the headline "Veil's Revival Reflects Women's Status in Islam." The article was right to point out the unsatisfactory position of women in most Islamic societies. It suffered, though, from a failure to observe that the revival of Arab conservatism affects all sectors of society, male and female. And why must Western observers look for a divine hand behind the veil? As evidence the artiele in question advances absurd quotations that it mistakenly attributes to the Koran. No, the Knran does not promise men sexual Council than in Britain's House of Commons (19), which has a comparable number of seats, The degrading practice of polygamy posed a serious problem. Old traditions and continuous wars, which took a heavy toll of the male populations. lation, provided arguments for maintaining it. Yet Islam discouraged polygamy, it insisted on almost impossible conditions, including equality among the spouses. Change continues, and Tun-cluding dress. One was the wearing of the "veil" — a black or white silk or cotton gown that coers a woman's head and extends down to the waist, knees or ankles, depending on age, region and customs. I am in no way an advocate of the veil, although I confess I have found it attractive, say, as worn by some women in Saudi Arabia over the latest haute-conture creations.

Like other aspects of life, the status of women varied with the rise and fall of the Islamic carpire. At one point, of course, Arabic works were ing translated into Latin and used as textbooks at the universities of Paris, Oxford and Louvain. It was from such heights that Islam slipped into the marshes of a decline from which the Arab world, the nerve center of Islamic civilization, has never completely re-emerged. In a number of today's fractious Arab states suppression of basic freedoms for women and men is often the order of the day. Governments lacking legitimacy hide behind distorted versions of Islamic thought. But for the delinquency of such regimes Islam is no more at fault than Christianity for despotism in Latin America And if some Egyptian women have discarded Western garments for conservative dress, it is also true that there are more women doctors per

FBI Queries Ex-Beret On POW Hunt in Laos

By Mark Gladstone and Richard E. Meyer Los Angeles Times Service

LOS: ANGELES — James G. (Bo) Gritz, a former U.S. Special Forces officer, returned here and was met by FBI agents who questioned him at length about his forays into Laos to rescue Americans he believes have been held captive since the Victoam War. After more than three hours of questioning Saturday, Mr. Gritz drove to his home in the Westchester section of Los Angeles, Richard T. Bretzing, special agent in charge of the FBI in Los Angeles, said:

In the interview, Mr. Gritz said that the U.S. government provided him with intelligence on enemy troop movements during one of his hunts inside Laos, and that he had established access to a member of President Ronald Reagan's cabinet whom he could have asked for help if he had found an American prisoner of war.

He refused to identify the cabinet member, but said: "For something like that, you have to plug in high up, and I don't mean the Defense intelligence Agency or the Joint Chiefs of Staff." He said an influential "lizison man" helped establish direct access to the cabinet member in case of an emergency.

Leaders in Beijing Plant Trees And Play Politics on Arbor Day

BELIING - China's leaders turned out in force on Arbor Day to plant trees, and they wound up using the occasioo to do a little

The nation's paramount leader, Deng Xiaoping, emphasized Saturday the need to continue China's present course as he helped plant pine trees on hills northwest of Beijing.

"Afforestation is a great cause that brings benefit to our future generations," Mr. Deng declared. "We must persist in it 20 years, 100 years, 1,000 years, and never stop it."

Mr. Deng was alluding to his reforms of the last four years, not just to reforestation. His comments were the leading item on evening news programs because of their broader implications.

The Arbor Day ceremony has acquired considerable political symbolism during the last four years, High-ranking leaders must appear if they do not want to be counted out of the political lineup. Bankers Say New Dollar Issues Not the Sort to Thrill Investors

PARIS New dollar issues continue to be lanached on the Eurobond market, but, like most recent offerings, they remain largely unsold. The snaple reason, bankers admit, is the that terms are just not pitched Underwriters can afford to ignore suvestors' indifference because short-term interest rates — the underwriters cost of money to finance holding bonds in inventory — are less than 9% percent. By warehousing the bonds, which carry coupons of up to 11% percent, the underwriters can a comfortable profit.

But there is a limit to how long underwriters can go on building investtones in anticipation that long-term rates will drop and enable them to mload their holdings at a handsome profit on a public suddenly hungry for bonds bearing coupons of 10 percent or more.

Further, there is some question about whether long-term rates will indeed drop. Federal Reserve Board Chairman Paul A. Volcker told Congress last week that the growth

The broader M-2 measure jumped $39.6 billion in February, a rise of more than 23 percent compared to the Fed's target growth of 7 to 10 percent. The broadest measure, M-3, rose $26.5 billion in February, also well over the Fed's target of 6½ to 9½ percent.

Analysts are divided on how to interpret Mr. Volcker's remarks. Some believe that they were intended to still his monetarist critics and that the fed will tolerate consciously must there is rolled suidence that the sympo-

But others fear that Mr. Volcker was signaling the markets not to expect any immediate further decline in interest rates. if rates do not fall, the anticipated rush to buy bonds may not develop and underwriters could be left holding a disturbingly high supply of

Substantial Discounts

Any attempt to unload these holdings could be disastrous for the underwriters. Virtually all the recent issues are quoted at substantial discounts, wiping out commissions earned by underwriters.

Honeywell, for example, marketed $100 million of seven-year bonds at par bearing a coupon of 10% percent. These ended the week at 97%, where they yielded the equivalent of 11.34 percent. Even that level appeared to be too generous, as it was equal to a mere 62 basis points (100 equals one percentage point) over the yield of U.S. Treasury paper. Had Honeywell sold its bonds in New York, hankers estimate it would have had to pay 80 to 90 basis points over Treasury paper.

The $100-million American Express issue floated a week ago at par bearing a coupou of 10% percent for sever years was quoted at 96% for a yield of 10.99 percent.

Also marker water was the issue for Bank of America - which was cut in size to $250 million from the originally intended $300 million. The cut falls entirely on the $150 million initial offering, with $100 million still held in reserve and to be tapped into the market as conditions permit. alent of what is being done domestically," said Gustave M. Hanser, formerly head of Warner-Amex Cable and now an Orion director, referring to the spread of private satellite communications systems in the United States. He said the willingness of European countries to begin deregulating telecommuni-cations made the kind of service Orion hopes to offer both political-ly and commercially feasible.

Mr. McKnight said Orion was negotiating for access with several European government telecommunications agencies and was close to a deal with Mercury Inc., a Brit-ish company offering low-cost long-distance telephone service.

The real obstacle to Orion appears to be regulatory rather than technical. "Orion is presenting an xi we don't see where Intelsat interesting proposal, and we will a cope with the increased do look at it with the overview of its and in video truffic."

Hyster Workers Make Hard Choice

By Barnaby J. Feder New York Times Service

IRVINE, Scotland - Some workers suspected from William Kilkenny's first words — "The Hyster Company wishes sincerely to find a way to stay and expand in Scotland" — that they were about to receive a take it or leave it proposal from the chairman of the forklift manufacturer, which is based in Portland, Oregon.

The suspicion was quickly confirmed. In return for wage cuts and reductions in fringe benefits that would slice 13 percent off Hyster's labor costs in this small Ayrshire city southwest of Gladeric Company of the proposed to the small appropriate of the proposed to the costs in this small appropriate of the proposed to the prop ryster's labor costs in this small Ayrshire city southwest of Glaggow, it was prepared to take advantage of an estimated $20 million in government subsidies and invest $60 million in a five-year modernization and expansion program that might add 1,000 jobs. No agreement, and the 500 employees would soon be swelling the intemployment roles in a region where one out of three men is already jobless, the highest rate in Scotland. Employees had 36 hours to decide on the proposal, which was made Feb. 14.

"We felt it was blackmail," said Brian Gibbon, secretary of the elected committee that represents the workforce in dealings with management at the nonminized plant. As the committee calculus

As the committee calculated it, the "survival package" would reduce compensation 18 percent, including forgone benefits. "That first day, people were talking about refusing it to the man," Mr. Gibbon said.

By the next evening, however, the proposal had been almost unanimously accepted. Mr. Kilkenny, having settled on Irvine as the site to consolidate Hyster's European production, then departed for Europe to announce the sale of the company's components plant in Belgium to executives there and plants to the broduction at Hyster's Nijmesen plant in the Netherlands to Irvine as the sale of the contraction at Hyster's Nijmesen plant in the Netherlands to Irvine as the sale of the contraction at Hyster's Nijmesen plant in the Netherlands to Irvine and Irvine a production at Hyster's Nijmegen plant in the Netherlands to Ir-Hyster might have moved. However, workers and executives alike bere take a much more subdued view.

"As far as we are concerned, the 1,000 new jobs will never happen," said George Campbell, head of the workers' committee, echoing the view of competitors in Irvine that such projections are based on overly optimistic assessments of the forkhit market over the next five years. Noting that the deal had drawn concern that other employers might try to use it as a wedge to drive down wages elsewhere, he added, "We were in a no-win situation."

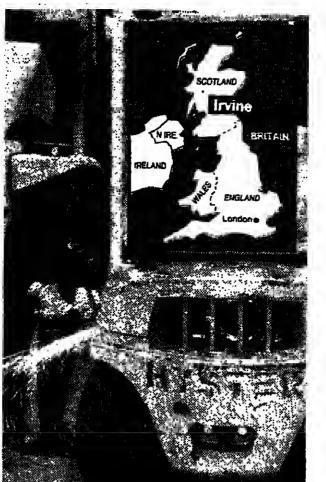

The Irvine Times, the local weekly newspaper, published an article headlined "What Price Iobs?"

Banks Get Tough on Sovereign Loans

The Far East, which until now has remained largely a favored leading area, is also feeling the heat. The $500-million loan for the Korean Exchange Bank, for which underwriters have been sought since the end of January, came to market last week with only $425 million underwritten by 17 lead

OPEC's Ministers Seem Confident of Accord for Today

By Bob Hagerry International Herald Tribune

LONDON - OPEC oil ministers appeared Sunday night to be confident of reaching an agreement on oil pricing and production sharing

"I have the impression we are near an agreement which we can finalize tomorrow," Marc Nguema, secretary-general of the Organiza-tion of Petroleum Exporting Coun-vious meetings in the past nine tries, said at a news conference.

Earlier in the day, Sheikh Ahmed Zaki Yamani, the Saudi minister, said an agreement was Aziz bin Khalifa al-Thani, who likely to be reached Monday afternonn, but some ministers, including Sheikh Yamani, have been sayplease everybody." ing from the start that agreement was only a day or so away.

Sheikh Yamani confirmed that the exporter group had tentauvely agreed to reduce its benchmark price, around which other official prices are aligned, by $5 to $29 a barrel. That plan hinges, however, on whether the 13 ministers can agree on production quotas for

The OPEC meeting, called in the hope of halting or at least slowing the decline of oil prices, completed its sixth day Sunday at the Inter-Continental Hotels.

Early in the day, conference sources said that demands by Venezeula and the United Arab Emirates were delaying completion of an agreement on output quotas.

Venezuela, whose diplomacy helped draw OPEC's factions together for the talks in London, was believed to be demanding a quota of about I.8 million barrels a day while other members said Venezue-la should be limited to 1.6 million. In February, Venezuelan officials say, the country produced about 1.9 million barrels a day.

In any case, OPEC never has managed to enforce production limits on its members. A quota sys-tem adopted last March disintegrated after a few months.

Nonetheless, the ministers seemed determined to reach some sort of agreement in London, after vious meetings in the past nine

BRUSSELS — European Community foreign ministers meet Monday to review the latest developments in the transatlantic disoute over farm subsidies and are likely to come out in favor of high-

Shultz, the U.S. secretary of state. Mr. Thorn has been pressing for talks with Washington at ministerial level, possibly before the end of this week, to prevent the dispute flaring into a trade war. The diplomats said Mr. Shultz had responded positively to the idea of talks, but was anxious to quately prepared for. Although tentative dates have been discussed, no public announcement of a meeting has been made.

F a player with a long, strong trump suit is forced to ruff an early trick, most players, obsessed and South will lose just one club with economy, routinely use the smallest available spot-card. An expert will routinely ruff with a slightly higher eard, knowing that the smallest card will occasionally have a special value.

In the deal shown, West has opened the bidding and East has responded. South's bid of four hearts ends the auction, and two top diamonds are led. East plays the diamond queen and then dis-cards a spade. If South ruffs with the deuce, he will be defeated by careful defense. He will have to rely on finding West with the club ace, and the odds are against that since East must have some strength the declarer who has taken the trouble to ruff with the seven or eight of trumps will be able to maneuver out of trouble. He will cash the heart ace, removing the queen, and play two more trump winners. But instead of drawing the third trump, he will cash two spade winners and lead his trump deuce. Since East will have to win, the contract will be safe. The return will have to be a black suit or, and the same throw-in play would become available.

LANGUAGE The Mark of Cain

By William Safire

WASHINGTON — After the Kahan commission report was released on the massacre in the refugee camps in Beirut, the former Israeli Defense Minister Ariel Sharon was quoted as saying that the report had put "the mark of Cain" on his country; he subsequently said he refused to "bear the mark of Cain."

Most people think the mark of Cain to be a hadge of dishonor, akin to the letter A embroidered in red on the dress of an adultress, as popularized by Nathaniel Hawthorne in "The Scarlet Letter."

Not so, according to David Noel Freedman, of the University of Michigan and the general editor of the Anchor Bible. "Mr. Sharon and many others bave misunderstood and therefore misapplied 'the mark of Cain," writes Professor Freed-man. "Perusal of the biblical story in which it is mentioned shows clearly that the mark that was put on Cain by God was intended not as a symbol of guilt or a punitive sugma but rather as a sign of divine protection.

He cites the passage in Genesis (4:13-15) as translated, of course. in the Anchor Bible. Cain, baving murdered his brother and been banished, protests to God that he is likely to be murdered himself. 'If so, Yahweb said to him, 'whoever kills Cain shall suffer ven-geance sevenfold. And Yahweh put a mark on Cain, lest anyone should kill him on sight." A similar protective marking is mentioned in

Professor Freedman does not take up Cain's cause — hardly anybody does — but concludes that when Cain showed remorse, "God took pity on him and expressed His compassion by putting a protective mark on the miscreant. The mark of Cain therefore is not part of the punishment but a symbol of divine protection."

That struck me as putting too many angels on the head of a pin. I turned to Professor Michael Coogan, who is into the Old Testament at Harvard Divinity School, He is willing to grant the immediate protective conjext of the mark of Cain. hut adds: "In the larger context, the mark is negative because Cain has been banished and cursed. The restrict in width, and is most often mark is a sign of divine protection applied to conditions laid down or hut only in the context of punish-requirements to be met.

tion, I am now prepared to pass semantic judgment on the mark of Cain. (It is mark, by the way, not sign, which may be a more literal translation of the Hebrew word, or brand, which used to be the more frequent usage; current usage commands mark.)

Sharon used the phrase in its correct current meaning. The mark is something to be ashamed of, not to wear as protection. Sometimes etymology steers you wrong.

HE hot new verb on Capitol Hill is fence.

Most Americans know that to fence means "10 sell stolen goods." A few old-timers can recall the original, nonmetaphoric meaning of the word, "to build a fence around": Occasionally, they can be heard singing, "Gimme land, lotsa land . . . don't fence me in,"

When President Reagan was struggling to find a compromise for the basing of the MX missile, he brought Senator John Tower of Texas before the cameras in the room. The senator announced that "funding for produc-tion of the MX missile would be retained in the bill but would be fenced.

The cognoscenti knew what he meant, of course, because the president bas used fence that way.

"In Senator Tower's statement," explains Linda Hill, who explains these things on his behalf, "the word fence was used to mean restrict. The money for the MX was to be approved, but before it could be used, certain requirements had to be met — that was the restriction, or the fence."

Therefore, if you want to put a limit on something's use, fence it. But what is this going to do to Washington's hollest word of last year, cap? In political parlance, to can — to place a cap upon, as oil workers cap a gusher — became the preferred term for "ceiling." Does the onset of fence hlow the lid

Not necessarily. Here is the synonomy: To cap means to restrict in height, and is most often applied to sums of money; to fence means to

Exercising In Style

By Judy Klemesrud New York Times Service

TEW YORK - Back in the dark ages, say 15 years ago, the few women who went to health clubs to exercise wore hlack leotards over black tights. That, or faded gym shorts left over from high-school days, worn with scruffy T-shirts.

Women wore those things mainly because there were no men in the single-sex health clubs that predominated then. And since working out had not yet been deemed fashionable, the manufacturers of exercise clothes seemed to concentrate on only two colors: black and navy blue.

Then came the women's move-ment, followed by coed bealth clubs and Jane Fonda in her striped leotards. Things baven't been the same since. Nowadays, bealth clubs are filled with women lifting weights, jogging and doing calisthenics, and they are doing it in style.

Leotards now come in every shade of the rainbow. Some are cut high on the sides, to expose the maximum amount of thigh. Others are held up by tiny straps that seem to be defying the laws

Then there are the accessories: No well-dressed female healthclub member seems to be without one or two of them. Heading the list are leg-warmers that match or contrast with the leotards. Next come headbands, and then body jewelry, and then belts to accentuate 22-inch waists. Lorna Laccone is a good example of someone's being decked out for a workout. The other night, while taking an aerobic dance class at the New York Health and Racquet Club, she was wearing a satiny red leotard cut high on the thighs and low in the back, a white beadband, shimmery white tights, black wool leg warmers, a thin black belt around ber waist and a gold Egyptian necklace.

She said: "Ten years ago if a woman picked up a weight, people thought she was strange. Today a lot of women are lifting sly smile, "And all the time I weights, and as you notice, I'm not a massive hulk. There's nothing nicer than a feminine, tight, thin body, so why cover it up in baggy clothes?" Lisa Hammel, 30, an adminis-

British Communist Party membership is at a post-World War II ow of 18,500, and it has had no legislator in the House of Commons for more than 30 years.

The British working class never chose Marx, opting instead for a middle way. Milk-and-water socialism, the Communists call the ideology of Britain's powerful Labor Party.

Marx had a regular seat in the domed reading room of the British Museum. All his life, he earned money from articles on current affairs for newspapers, among them the New York Tribune. And he led organizations of working men who debated and anistrated to change the debated and agitated to change the
